Army Day Finds War Department Near Its Goal

Twenty-Third Anniversary Of American Entry Into The World War

By E. E. BOMAR
Washington, April 6—(AP)—Army day—the twenty-third anniversary of American entry into the world war—gave the nation an opportunity today to gauge the progress made in transforming the country's land forces into a streamlined, hard-hitting machine.

Reviewing the record of the past year, military officials expressed gratification at the success of the program for reinforcing national defenses.

Modernization
Since 1939's Army day, and especially since the start of the European war, the United States army has been undergoing an intensive modernization.

The day's martial parades in scores of cities attested that the revolutionary process was still going on. Regular army troops were somewhat conspicuous by their absence because five divisions were undergoing field training in the south.

These regulars, national guardsmen, and the garrisons of Hawaii, the Panama canal and other outlying posts received from President Roosevelt "thanks and congratulations" for their energy and efficiency in carrying out the purposes of his proclamation of a limited national emergency last September.

An inventory based on the latest official reports by Secretary Woodring, General George C. Marshall, chief of staff, and others figuring prominently in the preparedness efforts would indicate that:

Prepare for Million Men
The war department's long-sought objective of a compact, full-trained and equipped professional force, ready for quick action and expansion in an emergency, is definitely in sight for the first time in peace.

Arms and equipment are in service, on order or immediately projected for an "initial protective force" of about 400,000. Congress has provided some funds toward reserve equipment for a "protective mobilization plan" involving a million men.
